Statement of Property and Debt and Proposed Separation Agreement

Are you Petitioner or the Respondent? (Check one of these boxes)

- I am the Petitioner. (The party that filed the original petition)
 I am the Respondent. (The party that answers the original petition filed by his or her spouse)

Are you the Husband or the Wife? (Check one of these boxes)

- I am the Wife.
 I am the Husband.

What does this document cover?

There are two parts to this document. Part One is your division of property and debt and Part Two pertains to spousal support or "maintenance." This document does not pertain to child support or custody. Issues addressing child support and custody are contained in a parenting plan.

Do I have to file this document?

Yes. You must file this document with either your "Petition for Dissolution of Marriage" or your "Answer," even if it is not signed by both parties.

What is a separation agreement?

It is an agreement in which you and your spouse agree to a distribution of property and debt and to provisions concerning maintenance and attorney's fees. If both you and your spouse sign this document, it is called a "Separation Agreement." It does not include provisions for child custody and child support.

Can the court do something different than what I have proposed?

Absolutely. Even if both you and your spouse have signed the agreement, the court is not bound by it. If the court finds that your agreement is “unconscionable” or does not divide all property and marital debt, it will not be approved by the court. The court can divide the property in any manner it considers fair, and it may or may not order maintenance to be paid.

Part One – Division of Property and Debt

What is the most common mistake unrepresented parties make in their dissolution case?

Without a doubt it is the failure to correctly list all marital and nonmarital property and marital debt. The rest of this form explains in detail how to avoid this mistake.

How do I complete Part One?

Part One consists of these instructions and six tables.

Table 1 - Marital property to be received by Wife

Table 2 - Marital property to be received by Husband

Table 3 - Nonmarital property to be received by Wife

Table 4 - Nonmarital property to be received by Husband

Table 5 - Debts to be paid by Wife

Table 6 - Debts to be paid by Husband

You must list all of your marital and nonmarital property and marital debt on one of these six tables.

Use a separate row for each item of property or debt. You should draw a line through all rows that do not contain an item of property. This is very important because someone could alter this document after you have signed it. Keep a copy of this document after you have signed it.

What is marital property?

RSMo §452.330 defines marital property. Usually marital property is property acquired by either spouse during the marriage of the parties other than property acquired by gift, inheritance, or in exchange for nonmarital property. This means that all wages earned during the marriage are marital property. All property owned by the parties is presumed to be marital property.

Nonmarital property can be converted to marital property by placing a spouse’s name on an account or title. Also, a marital interest can be acquired in nonmarital property by the contribution of marital assets to the increase in value of the nonmarital property. Finally, income from nonmarital property during the marriage of the parties is marital property.

Marital property to be awarded to Wife should be listed in Table 1 and marital property to be awarded to Husband should be listed in Table 2.

What is nonmarital property?

Nonmarital property is property that was acquired prior to the marriage or property that was acquired during the marriage by gift, inheritance, or in exchange for nonmarital property. Nonmarital property is sometimes also called “separate property.” Additionally, some state teacher retirement benefits are considered nonmarital. RSMo. §169.572.

Nonmarital property to be awarded to Wife should be listed in Table 3 and nonmarital property to be awarded to Husband should be listed in Table 4.

Can property be marital and nonmarital?

Yes. If an item of property is partly marital and partly nonmarital, then it should be listed under both the marital and nonmarital sections. For example, if one party had earned pension benefits for five years prior to the marriage and continued to earn the same pension benefits for five years during the marriage, one-half or 50% of the pension and retirement benefits are marital and one-half or 50% are nonmarital. In that situation, the pension and retirement benefits would be listed both under marital and nonmarital property.

What is “fair market value”?

This is the amount someone would pay for this item of property today. It is not what the property cost when you purchased it. A ten year old automobile has a value far less than the amount you paid for the automobile.

What does “security” mean?

The mortgage on a home is traditionally secured by the home. When you finance the purchase of an automobile, the company that loans you the money is listed on the title to the automobile. They too have a security interest in your car. Usually, a debt is secured by an item of property if the person to whom you owe the money can take the item of property if you fail to pay the debt. The schedules of debt ask you to list any security for that debt. You must also list the property that secures the debt under the property listings.

What if I don’t agree with this “Proposed Separation Agreement”?

You must take appropriate actions to protect your interests. CONSULT A LAWYER. Do not fail to respond if you have been served with these papers as the court may proceed without any further notice to you.

Do we have to list our property even if we’ve already divided it?

Yes, it must still be included on one of the tables.

What property should I list on this form?

ALL PROPERTY AND MARITAL DEBT must be divided in a dissolution of marriage proceeding. Your dissolution of marriage may not be final unless this is done.

This includes the following types of property and debt:

- Real estate
- Motor vehicles
- Bank accounts
- Pension and retirement plans and profit sharing plans
- Stocks, bonds or other securities
- Life insurance
- Cash on hand
- Household goods
- Personal goods
- Trust interests
- Businesses or partnerships
- Debts owed to you or your spouse by others
- Any interest in pending litigation or suits to be filed
- Farm equipment, animals or crops
- Interests in contracts made and not performed
- Other assets.

What debts should I list on this form?

You should list all loans from any individual, bank, credit card company, credit union, savings and loan association or other lending institution. Include all debts owed by either you or your spouse. Make sure to list all credit cards and any amounts owed pursuant to any bankruptcy or other repayment plans.

Debts that the Wife should pay are to be listed in Table 5 and Debts that the Husband should pay are to be listed in Table 6.

Do I have to list property even if my spouse's name is not on it?

Yes, you must list all property owned by you alone, by your spouse alone, and by you and your spouse together. You must list property even if it is not in joint names. Any property in which either you or your spouse claim ANY interest whatsoever, MUST be listed.

In many instances, you will not be able to sell your property or receive your retirement unless you prove that these items were listed in your dissolution of marriage judgment.

Do I have to list property that either of us is buying at the present time?

YES. You must list all property that either you or your spouse is purchasing by making monthly payments. So, even if you owe money on your car or home, it still must be listed. Actually, it must be listed twice: once as an item of property and once as a debt secured by the property.

Do I have to list property I owned before the marriage?

Yes. This is normally nonmarital property, but under some circumstances it may be considered marital property.

Do I have to list property my spouse owned before the marriage?

Yes. Just as you had to list property you owned before the marriage, you should also list property your spouse owned before the marriage. Once again, this is normally nonmarital property, but under some circumstances it may be considered marital property.

I don't know what my spouse owns so how can I list it?

You should hire a lawyer to assist you. A lawyer has the ability to assist you in locating the assets of your spouse.

My mother added my name to her house, but I have not paid any money toward the purchase. Do I still have to list this property?

Yes. This would normally be nonmarital property, but you still have to list it.

Do I have to list property that I acquired after the separation?

You are still married so any property or debt that you have acquired since your marriage has to be included.

What happens if I don't list all the property and marital debt?

It would be a VERY BIG mistake not to list all your property and marital debt. Your dissolution of marriage may not be final, and your spouse will be able to come back in the future and try and get this item of property. In some cases, you may not be able to receive your pension or sell your property without proof that your dissolution of marriage judgment listed the property.

Should I list my pension information even though I am not entitled to receive any benefits at the present time?

Yes.

Does this mean that I have to list every dish and towel that we own?

No. You do not need to list property if it is of minimal value. If the item of property is worth less than $100.00, you may omit it from your list.

What if I acquire some property or debt after I file my case?

If you acquire any additional property or debt during the time this case is pending, you must notify the court of that fact at the time of your hearing. If you dispose of any property or pay off any debt during the time this case is pending, you must notify the court of that fact at the time of your hearing.

What if I run out of space on one or more of the tables?

You may make copies of any of the six tables if you need additional room for more property or debt. When you have listed all the property and debt, you should number the pages. Make sure you write "Not Applicable" or "N/A" in each box under "Item of Property" or "Item of Debt" that you do not fill. (Someone could fill this in later with some other information)

After you have completed Part One, you should complete Part Two of this document which pertains to spousal support or maintenance.

Important

This document is placed in a court file, which is an open document available to the public. In listing your bank or other accounts, or your credit card or other debt, do not include the entire account number. You should include only enough information to distinguish your account from other accounts owned by you and your spouse. For example, in listing a credit card number, you should include only the last four digits of the account, such as xxxx-xxxx-xxxx-1234.

Part Two – Maintenance and Other Provisions

WHAT IS MAINTENANCE?

Maintenance is money paid on a regular schedule by one spouse to the other after the dissolution of marriage. It may be for a set period of time or it may be for an indefinite period of time. It usually terminates upon the death of either party or the remarriage of the party receiving maintenance unless the parties agree otherwise. It may or may not be subject to future modification upon a showing of changed circumstances. Maintenance used to be referred to as “alimony.”

MAINTENANCE TO WIFE (Check one and only one of these boxes.)

- The court lacks jurisdiction to enter any orders with respect to maintenance of the Wife.
 - No maintenance is to be paid to Wife by Husband. This agreement is not subject to modification.
 - Husband shall pay to Wife the sum of _____ per month as and for maintenance. Said maintenance is _____ subject to modification. Said maintenance shall terminate upon the death of either party, the remarriage of Wife, or at such earlier time as set forth herein.
